Style: Experimental / IDM / Breakcore

Miami's Otto Von Schirach manages to sound as if he's both satirising breakcore and celebrating it on this latest album

Just as a couple of years back he grossed us all out with his double 7" of... bathroom noises, Pukology Oozing Bass Spasms finds the expert producer tearing his way through some fairly unpleasant sampling material, themed around pornography and exploitation samples

There are some thrilling bits of production here, from amen break-decimating 'Magnetic Rave Headache' to the restless unpleasantness of 'DJ Hepatitis Tofuburger' (is that Liza Minelli I can hear in there?)

At its most dreary, you get the perversely slowed down 'Dance Like A Hoe', featuring lyrics that are every bit as tiresomely misogynistic as its title would suggest

When this sort of thing shows up you can't help but feel that ol' Otto is just revelling in the dumb electro-booty tropes he at first appeared to be sending up. He gets it right again on the ridiculously vicious 'Spine Serpents On Sperm Island' though, dishing out ridiculous sounding horror movie organs and heavy rock played out on pneumatic drills. Keeping the standards up 'Zombie Halloween' is like a weird music hall ditty about spooky goings on, which like so many things this week, seems preoccupied with Tom Waits

Finally, you know the album has just about run its course by the time 'Satanic Unicorn Orgy' rears its head, throwing Right Said Fred about the place. Oh lordy
